PURPOSE

The collective record of human existence is a powerful source for understanding human life. Questions such as "Where did we come from?" and "Where are we going?" can only be considered in light of knowledge of the past and its effect on the present and future. Archaeology, the systematic recovery and analysis of the material remains of past cultures, helps to provide that knowledge.

MAS stimulates the study of archaeology and Native American cultural history, especially in Massachusetts, and serves as a bond between students of archaeology. It fosters public understanding through educational programs and publications, and promotes scientific research; careful, well-directed archaeological activity; conservation of sites, data, and artifacts; and seeks to prevent the collection of specimens for commercial purposes.
